- Neologisms: We create fresh words, called "neologisms," for various reasons. They emerge from advances in technology, changes in our culture, or the need to name things we've never described before.
- Borrowing from Other Languages: English has borrowed words from different languages over time. For instance, we got "entrepreneur" from French, "sushi" from Japanese, and "pizza" from Italian. We do this when we need words for new ideas or things from other cultures."
- Technology: The digital era has brought many tech-related words like "selfie," "app," "emoji," and "googling." As technology evolves, so does our language.
- Social and Cultural Trends: Social media and popular culture also invent new terms. Words like "FOMO" (Fear of Missing Out) and "troll" are now part of our language.
- Globalization: Our connected world borrows words from different languages, giving us terms like "sushi," "yoga," and "tsunami."
