Did You Know: Bhagat Singh was deeply influenced by the Jallianwala Bagh massacre, which he witnessed as a child?

Bhagat Singh - The Jallianwala Bagh Massacre

Jallianwala Bagh was a public garden in Amritsar, Punjab, which became the site of one of the most horrifying incidents during the struggle for Indian independence. The garden was a popular gathering place, and on April 13, 1919, it was packed with thousands of Indians, including men, women, and children, who had gathered to protest the repressive Rowlatt Act.

As the peaceful gathering began, Brigadier General Reginald Dyer, a British military officer, arrived with a contingent of fifty soldiers, most of whom were Gurkha and Baluchi troops. Without warning, Dyer ordered his troops to open fire on the unarmed and unsuspecting crowd. They continued to fire for about ten minutes until they ran out of ammunition. The result was a horrific and brutal massacre. Official British reports estimated that nearly 400 people were killed and over a thousand injured, but Indian sources claim that the death toll was much higher, possibly exceeding a thousand. Many people were killed as they tried to escape, and the narrow entrance to the garden made it difficult for the crowd to disperse quickly.

The Jallianwala Bagh Massacre remains a symbol of British oppression in India and a reminder of the sacrifices made by those who sought independence. In 1951, a memorial was erected in the garden to honor the victims of the massacre. It stands as a somber reminder of the atrocities committed during the struggle for independence.
