Understanding

Statement: Lack of encouragement in the first few years of life can have adverse consequences.

Assumptions:

I. A great part of the development of intelligence occurs in the earliest years of life - Implicit (As the statement mentions that lack of encouragement in the first few years of life can have adverse consequences, this implies that when properly provided the encouragement is well received in the earliest years of life then it helps in developing intelligence.)

II. 50 percent of the intelligence at age of 14 is already predictable by the age of four - Not Implicit (The statement mentions lack of encouragement having adverse consequences, but this doesn't infer predictability of intelligence in 14-year-olds by the age of four.)

Therefore, the correct answer is Only assumption I is implicit.
